ty yards further on, by the side of the road, was a small white object. She crouched on, viewing herself from her horse and picked it up. "Lena's handkerchief!" she cried. The professor waved his arm westward.

CHAPTER XXXI. (Continued.) He pointed with his forefinger. Laura peered forward. There was something which seemed to be just a faint cloud upon the horizon. The professor handed her his glasses.

"Where are we?" she whispered. "The fire!" "That's all right," Quest shouted. "We'll be out of it in a moment. Hold tight to my neck."

He braced himself for a supreme effort and ran along the pathway. His feet were blistered with the heat. There was a great burn on one of his arms. At last, however, he passed out of the danger stage and staggered to where the professor, the inspector and Laura were waiting.

"Say, that was a close shave," he faltered, as he laid Lena upon the ground. "Another five minutes—well, we won't talk about it. Let's lift her on to your horse, Laura, and get back to the camp."
